You can read The Art Lesson in a way that highlights Focus and Self Control, a Life Skill that promotes Executive Functions. Children need this skill in order to achieve their goals, especially in a world that is filled with distractions and information overload. It involves paying attention, remembering the rules, thinking flexibly and exercising self control.

TIP:

You can ask your child:

- “What was Tommy’s goal? How did he work toward it?”

Wait for the child’s response and respond to that.

SKILL:

This back and forth interaction is what researchers call “Take-Turns Talk.” Like a game of ball, one of you says or does something and the other responds. The importance of these everyday interactions to brain-building is a key finding from child development research.

TIP:

You can ask:

- “What were the goals of Tommy’s friends?”

SKILL:

Focus and Self Control includes having a goal and working toward it, even when you feel like doing something else or others want you to do something else. Executive Function skills are driven by goals.

TIP:

Ask your child to think about what Tommy did when he was told to take his box of 64 crayons home or to copy a picture?

You can ask:

- “Did that help Tommy achieve his goal?”

Continue the conversation by asking:

- “Have you ever had a time you wanted to do something different and had to wait? What did you do to help yourself wait?”
SKILL:
Focus and Self Control requires us to be able to think about things flexibly as well as not to go on automatic, but to exercise self control.

TIP:
The book ends with the fact that Tommy continued to draw and still does.

Ask the children if they notice that the character in the book (Tommy) and the book’s creator (Tomie) have almost the same name.

SKILL:
Children would enjoy looking up Tomie dePaola and finding out more about him.

Pursuing additional information requires Focus and Self Control.
